EPA Strikes Deal With Enviros Over Sulfur Dioxide Deadlines

By Sean McLernon

Law360, New York (May 30, 2014, 7:03 PM ET) -- The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency on Friday reached a settlement with environmental groups claiming the agency missed a deadline to identify violations of sulfur dioxide standards, pledging to complete certain area designations in as quickly as 16 months.

In a consent decree scheduled for publication in the Federal Register on Monday, the EPA agreed to issue a notice of promulgation of area designation under the 2010 sulfur dioxide National Ambient Air Quality Standard, or NAAQS, for areas with three years' worth of monitoring data or large...
